[illegible] SOME SELECT [illegible]

[Reported by Junius Brutus Special Reporter

[Note. An act of the legislature was passed [illegible] October 1878 providing for the organization of a separate supreme court to consist of three judges appointed by the governor for a term ending June 1880 The state constitution provides that the judges shall be elected by the people but the court held that provision does not apply to the present state of affairs and thereupon the governor, pursuant to a resolution of the [illegible] the supreme judges [illegible] appointed James Patrick chief justice Reuben [illegible] and Peter Simple associate justices It being important for the people to understand the principles on which this new court renders its decisions these opinions, which were not filed are now published.]

Hunt and Wah ker vs Tieghl

HEAD NOTES

1. Political Maxim — "Stand by your friends" is a well settled maxim in politics In the absence of a statute it is hereby declared to be a part of the "unwritten law" of this state Query—Whether this fundamental rule is not more binding than even a decree of the [illegible]

2. Comity —Where one member of this court is under political obligations to a suitor the principal of comity applies, and the other members have no option to oppose his decision in favor of that suitor The concurring opinion of Patrick C J in Estees vs Knott is adopted as the law of this court

3. Option-Contracts —Where a creditor has the option to treat a debt as due or not when the interest shall be unpaid, he must be held to have elected to treat it as due or to have lost the option in some other way if that "option" conflicts with a fundamental political maxim

4. Guaranty —Where in addition to putting up his property as surety for a ruinous debt a political friend guarantees that the principal will pay the whole debt in a specified time, and the principal fails and becomes unable to pay, it is contrary to equity and to the sense of common justice that such a surety should be held to have meant to guaranty such a debt

5. Petitio Principii — Begging the question" is a very important rule of law logic Where a plausible reason must be given for a decree depriving a man of about $69 000 it is proper that such opinion should be very lengthy and should assume the real issues as [illegible] with defendant, and argue earnestly to the conclusions to be drawn from these assumed false premises.

6. Conscience —Where the opinions and decrees of this court are of no validity and may be overturned by a constitutional supreme court, it is a salve to the conscience to know that plaintiff has not lost all by our act

7. [illegible] "outsiders." — Where plaintiffs' attorneys are "outsiders" and one of them is popular on account of his reputed fairness and uprightness, it is a special pleasure to cinch them and thereby weaken their influence with the people.

FACTS.

The facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

[Note—Reuben, J , did not sit in this case, having tried it in the court below]

OPINION.

Patrick, C. J., delivering the opinion

This is a suit in equity to foreclose a mortgage. The court below decided in favor of the plaintiff, sustaining the mortgage on Tieghl's property From that decree Tieghl appeals. The evidence in the case shows the following facts, viz —Wah ker lives in San Francisco On the 19th of August, 1874, Coal Schmit made the following note

PORTLAND, Oregon Aug 19 1874

Two years after date without grace for value received, I promise to pay to Wah ker or order $69,000 with interest thereon at the rate of one per cent per month until paid Interest to be paid monthly, and if there be default in the payment of interest for the period of twenty days then the whole sum, principal and interest, shall at the option of the holder of this note, be immediately due and payable

To secure this note Tieghl put up a large amount of real estate transferring it to Hunt as trustee, with an agreement that if said note became 30 days over due Hunt shall after demand for payment, sell the land on 30 days notice At the end of the two years (August 19, 1876) $96 750 of the note remained unpaid. On October 18, 1876, C and T obtained an extension of time for one year from that date for the payment of the note and Tieghl put up more real estate as before. The second agreement recited the first agreement and note, and provided that in consideration of the extension, C and T "undertake and agree that the said C will promptly pay the interest when due, and the principal at the end of the year and that, in default of payment of principal or interest, the whole debt shall become due as provided in the first agreement and note [i e interest being in default, whole debt to be due at the option of Wah-ker.—Rep] The agreement then declares—that Wah ker agrees to extend the note for payment of principal and interest one year or until default in payment of interest, and no longer, but if default be made in payment of interest, the whole debt with then accrued interest "shall become due and payable as in said note specified" [i e at Wah-ker's option —Rep] "It is distinctly understood and agreed by the parties hereto that the agreement of August 19, 1874, is not annulled vacated or set aside by the execution of this agreement except in so far as the same may conflict with this agreement In all other respects the two instruments are to be taken and construed together"

Default was made in the payment of interest January 21, 1877 Plaintiffs commenced suit to foreclose September 26, 1877, one month before the year expired, in the exercise of their supposed option Defendant claimed his property was discharged because Hunt and Wah ker did not commence soon enough, and also claimed that he was not a guarantor to the note under said contracts

It will be seen that the first and most important question arising upon these facts is whether the option of Wah-ker to treat the debt as due or not due on default in payment of interest as allowed in the note and the first contract was annulled vacated or set aside, by the second contract for the last extension of one year had not expired at the time suit was brought and therefore the debt was not due except at Wah ker's option if that option existed and Tieghl had no defense. Did the option conflict with the terms of the second agreement? That agreement provides that in default of payment of interest the whole debt shall become due and payable as in said note specified. So far from the "option being in conflict with it is actually adopted by this italicized clause of the second agreement Plainly only that part of the note is annulled which provides that the note shall become due two years from August 19, 1874, and in its stead the second contract provides that the note shall become due one year from October 18 1876 In the original note it was provided that the debt on default in interest should become due at the holder's option In the second agreement it was provided that the debt on default of interest should become due as in said note specified, i e at holder's option Nothing could be plainer But to clinch the matter the second contract expressly requires the two instruments to be taken and construed together in all respects where they do not conflict. So construing them together the contract in the note would read

One year after [illegible] with interest [illegible] grace for value [illegible] to pay to Wah ker or order [illegible] the holder of this note be immediately due and payable

He [illegible] Wah ker's [illegible] until October 18, 18[illegible] [illegible] Wah ker [illegible] defense [illegible] He was [illegible] the [illegible] unwritten [illegible] are especially [illegible] to declare the unwritten law [illegible] written law [illegible] promulgated [illegible] nevertheless observed and administered in the courts of the state The lamented Andrew Jackson [illegible] to a principle nearly like this and President Grant invariably stood by his friends Congress and the legislatures frequently relieve sureties from their bonds This salutary principle is thus very highly endorsed and is of such importance as to take high rank among legal axioms Indeed it may well be doubted whether this fundamental rule is not more binding than even a decree of the [illegible] When this maxim intervenes no opposition can be allowed to Wah ker and none even to my associate justices to dissent because here the principle of comity applies with its fullest force. And we now declare the concurring opinion of the chief justice in Estees vs Nott on the subject of comity to be adopted as the law of this court This too is a suit in equity and it is contrary to enlarged principles of equity and to common justice to believe that Tieghl would have put up in that way The consequences will be so ruinous that such hard law cannot be enforced Though the law in the case is perfectly plain equity must regard the consequences and will not enforce the law in such a case Such I am informed by Judge B Ransey Smith is the rule he acts on in his court on proper occasions, and he controls me as it were We are therefore constrained to give the case to Tieghl Still we are aware that such an opinion as this may not be filed It would be fatal to any re-election People might say in a spirit of wrong doing and for political capital that it was highway robbery of the eclectic species Still it is necessary that some opinion be filed It is true the constitutional provision requiring opinions to be filed does not apply to this court, as we have already held; but policy demands that we file an opinion and make it as plausible as possible Ah I have it I remember when I was at Princeton college I mastered the rule of logic known as petitio principii It is a first class rule in such cases as this and we hold it also to be a part of the "unwritten law" of the state I will therefore "beg the question" I will assume the real point in the case to be in favor of defendant, and assert without argument or reason or authority that plaintiff's option expired forever at the end of two years from the date of the original note (Aug 19, 1874) and with that false premise I will reason upon the consequences flowing from that position as discharging the surety It is true the claim of discharge by the surety even with that premise, is quite doubtful, but I can make it plausible and cite a large array of authorities In addition to that I can make the case very long and discuss other unimportant questions with profound gravity so as to hide the real issues from the casual reader In a word I might say I will play the cuttle fish and emit dirty water to hide in its discoloration Scarcely anybody besides the attorneys in the case will examine so long an opinion carefully and if they make an outcry the people by reason of their law-abiding education will presume in favor of the supreme court and think the attorneys are only angry because they lost their case Besides that the attorneys will be afraid to incur our displeasure by attacking the decision in the press Still some attorney might have the courage to explain this matter to the people and if so he will probably be prepared to brave our anger and fight us on all points We are compelled, however, to risk that and trust to sly threats of disbarring him for presuming to call into question the righteousness of our decision

Therefore on the question of option, we will assume that no option existed after August 19, 1876 thus begging the whole question and the opinion which we file shall only contain the following on that subject

After the note became payable by the lapse of two years that option was gone " * * On the 18th of October 1876 the several parties entered into a new contract whereby the time for the payment of the debt was extended for one year from that date in case the interest should be paid every month, but making the whole debt absolutely due upon the failure of Coal Schmit to pay the interest promptly at the end of each month By this contract it was no longer optional with Wah-ker to consider the debt as due or not due upon the failure to pay the interest punctually That option given him by the first contract, was taken away, and a default in the payment of a month's interest rendered the entire debt due at once It became due by the terms of the contract and independent of the will of the parties

By thus silently and contemptuously disregarding the real question in the case and assuming that there could be no necessity for argument on the option question, we put a bold face on the matter—and that 's a very strong argument itself with the unthinking So too the same style of reasoning applies to the question whether the defendant is a guarantor Guaranty is a contract by which one person is bound to another for the due fulfillment of a promise or engagement of a third party (2 Pars Cont. 3) "No special form or words are necessary to constitute a guaranty (2 Pars Cont 5) Now it is plain that T entered into an undertaking that C would pay the debt He in effect says I undertake (which means hold myself bound,) that C shall fulfill his said contract suppose he had said I bind myself by this agreement that C will pay the note when due could there be any doubt that it was a guaranty? The language used is practically the same Hence we must slur over this point also and only comment slightly on it as follows viz

"We do not consider that Tieghl incurred any personal liability to pay C's debt by this clause in the agreement There is no promise by him to pay anything (guaranty never is it is only a promise that another will pay—Rep) and the parties themselves specify in the same sentence and as a part of it what should be the consequence of a non payment by C to wit that the whole debt become due as provided in the note This clause in the agreement is simply that in consideration of the extension of the time for payment C and T promised not that they (of course not for it would not then be a guaranty but a direct indebtedness—Rep) but that C would pay the debt This certainly did not create any personal obligation on the part of T to pay anything If it was his intention to become personally liable for C's debt, doubtless it would have been so expressed in the agreement

Oh most sage conclusion! "Water is water," quoth Dogberry "because—it is water"

There is another circumstance in this case that has influence on this opinion We have already decided that ours is not a constitutional court and we hold our position by usurpation backed by the commander in chief of the army and navy of this state But when a constitutional court is elected as it will be next June our decision in this case may be overturned The judgment in favor of plaintiff in the court below was by a constitutional circuit court, the appeal to this court may be held simply void, and the judgment below ordered to be enforced This is a great salve [illegible] the argument would be the [illegible] danger [illegible] weakened However we [illegible] written [illegible]

Simple J concurring specially

Like the [illegible] Tieghl's attorneys. He talks all that is what we decide against him They will [illegible] and they don't make much by abusing this court We have to work hard enough on small pay without being abused in the bargain Besides that I swan I can't see what rights a Californian has got against a pioneer Webfoot We've got enough of these new immigrants anyhow

THE BANK OF SPAIN

A Very Remarkable Commercial Institution—Castilian Ideas of Finance.

HOW SPANISH BANKERS REDEEM NOTES—A GOVERNMENT CONCERN WHICH INSPIRES NO CONFIDENCE

Correspondence of the London Times

There are only two institutions that may be said to be highly flourishing south of the Pyrenees and these are the bull fight and the Bank of Spain The latter enjoys the patronage of the government which appoints its governor leaving the election of the directors to the body of the shareholders While the Spanish 3 per cents are at 15, and pay for the present only 1 per cent interest the shares of the Bank of Spain originally issued at 100 are now quoted at 250 and yield an interest of 25 per cent The central establishment of the bank is of course at Madrid but it has branches or succursales in all the provincial cities and to a great extent monopolizes the banking business of the Peninsula It issues notes of various value from 50 to 100 pesetas or francs and upwards to an amount four times representing the bullion which is supposed to constitute its metallic reserve These notes have a forced currency they are paid as cash to all government officials and pensioners, the bank discharging all the money transactions of the state, both as paymaster and collector All these duties however, lie lightly on the bank which in all its operations consults its own interest and convenience with utter disregard to the claims of the public Spanish bank notes in the hands either of a Spanish subject or of a foreign traveler are to all practical purposes worth little better than as many dry leaves A note issued at Madrid is not payable at any of the provincial branches, not even in payment of taxes due to the state—the provincial agent declaring that his business is to transmit nothing but gold or silver to the treasury

IN MADRID ITSELF

Up to the year 1874, the bank professed to cash its own notes in gold and silver but in that year the wording of notes was altered —the bank only promised to pay without stating in what coin—so that a man laying down a 100 franc note on the table of the bank receives now in exchange two 50 franc notes The rule for cash payment was at all times and is limited to 100 franc notes and as the bank is beset by customers from morning to evening and there is only one clerk at one window and he has a right to pay in four-real and two real (one franc and half a franc) pieces the paying work is distressingly slow The customers are kept cooling their heels in a long queue and without the most heroic perseverance and a great exertion of elbows a man has a chance of leaving the bank as empty as he came The consequence is that, as a rule in Madrid and absolutely in all other places a man can turn his notes to no purpose except by paying a percentage at an exchange office In great commercial places like Barcelona Bilbao, Seville and Madrid itself Bank of England or Bank of France notes are accepted eagerly by all private bankers and even by first class hotel keepers It is only Spanish bank notes that insure no confidence and are looked upon as wholly unmarketable In provincial towns as at Segovia or even at the royal seat at La Granja a traveler can only pay his way in gold and silver, and if he is away from home for any length of time he must carry with him a huge weight of metal, which would expose him to considerable danger of highway robbery had not the civil guards or gendarmes a most efficient corps to a great extent rid the country of the brigandage which was once its greatest scourge The Bank of Spain employs 87 per cent of its capital in its transactions with the government Only the remaining 13 per cent is supposed to be at the disposal of its other customers that is of the public, at whose expense the bank itself lives and thrives But, in sober fact while

THE GOVERNMENT OBTAINS

Loans from the bank to any amount at 6 per cent interest, private persons apply in vain for an advance of cash on any terms and even on the best security, unless they possess strong influence with some of the directors or with influential men connected with the government Thus, for any real benefit accruing to trade and industry the bank of Spain may as well be said to have no existence The bank of Spain is in fact nothing but a great government jobbing concern It keeps the government afloat in its dire emergencies by levying a percentage on the public revenue and expenditure and employs the money thus obtained either for the exclusive benefit of its own shareholders or for that of the government which allows it to break or evade the rules laid down in its charter with utter impunity It is difficult to understand how the Spanish people can put up with such a state of things The complaint of the public about this shameful abuse of the public trust is indeed loud and incessant But the press seems not to have one word to say on the subject The Spanish press is too poor to aspire to independence There are matters on which it is easily made worth its while to hold its tongue and on which any utterance might be attended with disastrous consequences Attempts are made now and then to denounce abuses, but these are followed by warnings which are seldom disregarded Freedom of the press in Spain is an egregious delusion A journal is suspended or suppressed by the authorities at the home office at their own discretion, without a chance of appeal or redress And are not these authorities bound to screen from attacks all their [illegible] and especially the minister of finance and his obliging servants the governor and directors of the bank Yet that the Bank of Spain is one of the very worst [illegible] is a point which a [illegible] A journey of a few months in the peninsula will give practical evidence of the fact to the most indulgent and least captious stranger

The distress occasioned by the open winter in New York is terrible in some directions The Times notes that signs of retrenchment among plumbers are everywhere visible A Nineteenth street plumber recently sold three pairs of carriage horses a well known plumber in Fourth avenue has advertised his steam yacht for sale and another plumber of almost equal notoriety, living in Brooklyn sold early last week $3 000 000 worth of railway securities to enable him to pay his grocers and wine merchants bills for the last six months

The Daily Oregonian.

SATURDAY MORNING, JAN. 10 1880.

THE STORM.

The storm which struck this city yesterday a few minutes before noon, while the most severe which has ever been known in Oregon was not regarded as at all terrific by people who have been accustomed to the hurricanes of the prairie states in the Mississippi valley. The sudden and rapid falling of the barometer indicated a really fearful storm, and we are informed that such a depression of the mercury in the states east of the Rocky mountains would have been regarded as the harbinger of a hurricane that but few if any buildings in Portland could have withstood. The barometer in this region has, however, a greater range than elsewhere, and the same commotion is not denoted relatively as in the states of the Mississippi valley. From Mr. Herman of the signal service, who was very attentive to the indications of his instruments during the prevalence of the storm, we learn that the barometer reached a lower point in Portland yesterday than was touched elsewhere, probably, in the United states during the year past. Piddington's "Sailors' Handbook," an acknowledged authority upon storms, more especially at sea, which Mr. Herman has kindly furnished us, contains a vast number of illustrations of the fluctuations of the barometer, and none of these illustrations shows a greater depression of the mercury in the same space of time on land than was witnessed here yesterday. At sea the depression has often been to 28 inches, and in some instances it sank down to 27.25, but this has only occurred in low latitudes. Altogether the storm was one which will long be remembered in Oregon, and one which will not have a parallel in the lifetime of those who witnessed it, in this country.

THE DECENNIAL CENSUS.

The fact was announced some days ago that two or three gentlemen were on their way from the east for the purpose of inspecting the fishing interest on this coast and collecting accurate statistics in regard to that important industry. It appears now, however, that the trip of these gentlemen to the coast has a more extended object. In this object, according to the New York Times, is shadowed the magnitude and excellence of the plans which Superintendent Walker has devised and is carrying out by the aid of assistants, who are eminent as investigators and students of social and natural phenomena, for the purpose of making the tenth census more comprehensive and valuable than its predecessor, which was in advance of anything of the sort accomplished in this country. The first effort to obtain the statistics of fisheries was made in 1850, but the superintendent regards it as questionable whether the results obtained ever reached 20, if indeed they ever reached 15, percent. of the actual facts. By the act of 1850 all the statistics were to be gathered by the enumerators in their house-to house canvass; the men who counted the people were to ascertain also the facts relating to mining, fisheries, agriculture, manufactures, mortality, and many other subjects of social and industrial interest. The statistics thus obtained in relation to those subjects were so inadequate and inaccurate, and sometimes so positively discreditable, and even disgraceful, to the census, their only possible effect being to mislead the reader and misrepresent the country, that in the act of March 3, 1879, provisions were made for the withdrawal of certain classes of statistical inquiries from the ordinary enumerators, and the placing of them in the hands of experts and special agents. The superintendent has set on foot several important investigations in relation to special topics. The results of these will make the census of 1880 peculiarly valuable, and the adoption of this plan of obtaining important knowledge is a long step in advance in the history of census-making in the United States. It is in preparing for the collection of these special statistics by appointed agents, and in classifying and tabulating the results of the agents' work which have already reached the office, that most of the work thus far has been done. In his report to the secretary of the interior Superintendent Walker describes the steps he has taken to procure these special investigations, and gives reasons for his action. In the census of 1870 the total of the fish products of the country was put at only $11,000,000, among the items being 647,312 bushels of oysters. Statistics like these, says the Times, were only calculated to bring the census into discredit, even when they did not have consequences of a more practical nature, as in the international arbitration at Halifax in 1877. Superintendent Walker completed arrangements under the act of 1879, with Prof. Baird, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and president of the U. S. fish commission, by which the scientific direction of a comprehensive investigation into the statistics of the fisheries and the fishing populations of the United States should be assumed by himself, the administrative charge of the service remaining with the census office. Early in the summer a number of experts and skilled assistants, under the personal supervision of Prof. G. B. Goode, were put into the field. Special and well trained canvassers were engaged to proceed in boats along the entire eastern and southern coast, from Maine to Texas, visiting every fishing port or fishing village, and collecting the whole body of social and industrial statistics of the population engaged in this occupation, together with all facts of economic interest relating to the habits and haunts of the several species of fish, the methods and apparatus used by fishermen, the labor system in vogue, etc. Other parties were engaged to canvass the Pacific coast, the northern lakes and the western rivers, while special agents were engaged to work up the oyster fishery and obtain the statistics of the fish markets of the principal ports. Some of these agents have been at work four months. Large bodies of material are being compiled and tabulated in the office, and the character of the reports already received puts the success of the investigation beyond a reasonable doubt.

The causes of suicide have been speculated upon and the reasons of self destruction have been laid before the public time and again. That these speculations and reasons have been unsatisfactory, and that each case presents an anomalous theory, will not be questioned. The recent suicide of a young German in Brooklyn, N. Y., is one which presents at once a curious and contradictory phase. It appears that some months since this young German was thrown out of employment, and continued seeking employment until his meager savings had all been eked out and he owed his landlord the pitiful sum of about two dollars. This debt so preyed upon his mind that he sought repose in self-destruction. But equally as sad is the suicide of a young man at Goldendale, W. T., an account of which we published several days ago. This young man had the reputation of being sober and industrious. He started for his home in Portland and was arrested as an absconding debtor and taken back and incarcerated. Upon the complainant failing to pay the board of the young man he was released. The fact that he had been imprisoned as an absconding debtor, oppressed him so heavily that he sought the grave to cover up the disgrace he had brought on himself and family. These two cases of suicide are sad in the extreme, and viewed from the ordinary levity with which debt is looked on, is truly surprising if not curious. Of late it has been the custom to deprecate the loose manner in which men looked on their indebtedness, and the utter indifference with which they meet the collector. But in this age to have two young men in the bloom of health and the vigor of manhood one directly and the other indirectly, driven to this last panacea of trouble by debt, should be sufficient to quiet the skeptic in his constant censure of our dishonesty by postponing the payment of our debts.

The meeting of the democratic state central committee at Salem on Wednesday was not a very large or enthusiastic gathering, and the reported proceedings do not show a very encouraging condition of the affairs of the party. Of the twenty-three counties of the state, each having a member of the committee, six were represented by their delegates, seven by proxies and ten were entirely unrepresented. This lack of interest, shown by those who are presumed to take the lead in the party's affairs, is certainly very discouraging to the hopes of enthusiasm among those who usually only follow where others lead. But the truth, as is well known, is that the democracy in this state is wofully divided, and none of the party doctors are able to prescribe a remedy for the evils that afflict it. Under the administration of Gov. Thayer there has been a sort of revivification of the so-called fossil element of the democratic party, and this element, which embraces some of the democrats of the highest standing in the party, is likely to make itself extensively felt in the next election. At any rate the damaging effect of such a feeble demonstration on the part of the leaders cannot but be felt by the rank and file and regarded as evincing a want of confidence in the prospects of the party.

Charles Francis Adams, who used to be a first class hand in manipulating a "fraud branding iron," has not been heard from in regard to the Maine business. The country generally would recognize the appropriateness, if Charles Francis should put his mark on Garcelon and Pillsbury.

CITY.

THE FUNERAL.—The funeral of the late Wm. M Evans did not take place yesterday on account of the high wind which prevailed and which rendered it impossible for the ferry boats to cross the river. Storms permitting it will take place to day at 10 ½ A M. The members of the bar are requested to meet in the county court room at 10 o'clock when they will proceed to the residence. The members of Industry Lodge A O U W will meet at their hall at the same hour prior to going to the house. All members of other lodges of the order are invited to be present.

CONFLAGRATION.—On Thursday night as [illegible] Pacific Lodge B nai Brith was installing their officers at [illegible] Hall the evergreens and festoons about the chandelier caught fire from some cause. The room was filled with a dense smoke and presented an alarming appearance. A scene of confusion followed but fortunately no damage was done other than badly warping the chandelier.

ST MATTHEW'S MISSION CHAPEL.—In consequence of the total destruction of St Matthew's mission chapel the children and teachers of the Sunday school connected with it will assemble to morrow morning at the usual hour of 9 30 in St Stephen's chapel corner of Fourth and Madison streets.

POSTPONED.—The performance which was to have been given at Turn Halle this evening for the benefit of Mr Gus Mil[illegible] who was recently burned out was postponed, owing to the general consternation produced by the storm of yesterday until next Tuesday evening.

U.S. DISTRICT COURT.—Judge Deady will announce a decision this morning upon the exception to the libel in the case of the steamboat Calliope.

GATHERING OF THE CLANS.

Annual Meeting of the St Andrews' Society.

Thursday evening, the 8th instant, witnessed one of the largest and most enthusiastic meetings of the above society at their rooms No 135 First street, the occasion being the election of officers for the ensuing year. The following gentlemen having been balloted for, were declared duly elected:

President—Wm Honeyman
First Vice President—Dr Thomas Mann
Second Vice President—Duncan Ferguson
Secretary—A. G. Macdonald.
Assistant Secretary—David Smith
Treasurer—Wm Macbeth
[illegible] Committee—Peter Taylor Donald Mac[illegible], Wm. Kerron.
[illegible] Committee—Douglas W Taylor, [illegible] Smith A. W Bennett.
[illegible] Bearers—Angus Campbell John Car[illegible] Borthwick.
[illegible]—Andrew Roberts.
[illegible]—Dr. Thomas Mann
[illegible]—Dr. A. L. Lindsley.
[illegible]—Wm Macbeth

Any business had been disposed of including the election of new members the company spent some hours in social enjoyment when such favorite songs as "Caller Herrin," "Kail Brose," "The [illegible]," etc., were sung with great taste and [illegible] some of Caledonia's well known local [illegible]. The usual "Auld Lang Syne," a hearty [illegible] to Mr Andrew Roberts on the eve of his departure for Europe, and a cordial vote of thanks to the same gentleman for his kindness in placing his rooms at the disposal of the society for the past year, wound up a very pleasant and enjoyable evening. Members who were not present missed a great treat, and we would advise them to attend succeeding meetings if they really care for a good night's enjoyment, let alone the in[illegible] of the society.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE LECTURE.—The famous scientific [illegible] Dr. J. Simms, will deliver a course of six magnificently illustrated and popular lectures on physiognomy at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, beginning with a free lecture on the Human Face and how to read it, on next Monday evening at 8 o clock. Dr Simms has visited all civilized and many uncivilized countries for the purpose of studying the [illegible], manners, habits and peculiarities of their inhabitants, and is indebted for his wide popularity to the rare and entertaining manner in which he combines the facetious and the instructive in all that he says.

THE STORM KING.

The City and Vicinity Struck by a Violent Tempest

One Person Killed, two Perhaps Fatally Injured, and Several Others Slightly Hurt—Houses Unroofed and Blown Down

TELEGRAPH LINES PROSTRATED

Fences Demolished, Signs Unhinged, Windows Smashed and Trees Torn and Uprooted

The Damage to Property in Portland Estimated at $7,000

The most [illegible] storm [illegible] which has [illegible] visited this [illegible] yesterday between the hours of 11 A M and 1 P M [illegible] Not [illegible] telegraph [illegible] wild and furious [illegible] disastrous and terrible in its results.

The morning was unusually mild [illegible] about 11 o'clock when a breeze sprang up from the south [illegible] It soon became a gale [illegible]

It increased to a storm sweeping in a general [illegible] course but shifting [illegible] similar to the irregular movements of [illegible] torrents of water. In half an hour the greater part of the male population of the city were on the streets busily engaged in the work of protecting property and viewing with fearful anxiety the [illegible] of the mad scene. By 1 o'clock the wind had reached a velocity of about fifty miles an hour with occasional gusts at the extraordinary rate of sixty miles. The scene at this time, and for the succeeding two hours, was grand and terrible. The creaking of signs and buildings, the crash of falling awnings, the rumbling of tin roofs, the whistling of chimneys, electric wires and above all and louder than all the fierce rage and roar of the tornado [illegible] a fearful and terrifying chorus. Men hurried hither and thither eager, uncertain and fearful; women with white scared faces peered from the windows of their homes dreading to remain yet knowing not whereto fly for safety; little children from the schools which were dismissed ran homeward with frightened faces; horses snorted in helpless fear and even the dogs were affected with the universal terror. The signal office reports that the wind increased from an ordinary velocity of four or five miles per hour to the rate of thirty-nine miles per hour in less than fifteen minutes. Its direction at the commencement of the storm was from the southeast, but later it veered and came with less force directly from the south. But little rain accompanied the storm though black and darkling clouds rolled overhead during its entire progress. The aspect of

The River

Was wildly grand. For several weeks the Willamette has gradually swelled until a person standing on some high mountain top with a faint stretch of imagination could travel back in retrospection to the time when the valley on either side of the river was a vast inland sea or bay. It had swelled to proportions as when fed by its hundred affluents each vieing with its neighbor to expand the broad bosom of its mother channel to herculean size seeming to outdo her grand record of swollen tides. Such is a glimmering conception of the raging roaring hissing, singing splashing hurrying Willamette as it hurries its flood to the Pacific. Such is the river that several days has rushed on to the sea the drift of her swelling and swollen tributaries. But a change comes over this scene of terrifying grandeur and sublimity. The severe blasts of the tempest emulated by the unconfinable tide seeks to match the raging current in its tormenting fury. The gust takes the shape of the tempest, the tempest assumes the proportions of the gale and the gale swells in its mad fury to the hurricane. The two elements—wind and water—presented the spectacle of two unconquerable foemen as they rushed and shrieked by against over and across each other defying like two mighty Titians each other to battle. The tempest as it came seething and hissing down the valley lifting the spray of a thousand breakers into one vast sheet of water was neither grander nor more majestic than the broken current of the Willamette, presenting myriads of white-caps as they doffed their heads in defiance to the wild anger of the other combatant. Every now and then these gladiators who all the while were endeavoring to visit dire destruction on every obstacle in their way rested in their fury as though reserving the vengeance of their hidden power with which to renew the furious attack. Then the hurricane, with all the fervor and assurance of unconquerable force rushed with a grand defiance to renew the onslaught, and again presenting a scene of terrific and divine grandeur and majesty as the force of the gale lifted sheets of water and spray and hurled and dashed them madly about. Time and time again the tempest opened the attack with refreshed vigor and each time subsiding with the threatening warning to its antagonist that the battle would on again. Hours were spent in this display of force against force fury against fury and terror against terror. Time rolled by and these two elements, after a draw battle, resumed their wonted quietude—the water to rush its float on to the pitiless sea and to do the bidding of commerce and of man and bear on its bosom the barks of trade—the wind to waft the gentle breeze of warmed southern air and to recuperate its strength for another occasion and another foeman.

Crushed by a Falling Building.

At a quarter past twelve when the crowds at every corner were wondering whether the violence of the storm had ceased, hoping that it had spent its fury and without expressing it fearing that the worst was to come they were startled by a fire alarm from the Clarendon Hotel box. The alarm was responded to with wonderful alacrity, the wind assisting the men at the ropes. Arriving near the Clarendon a calamity worse than fire came into the view of the thousands who had gathered. The two story frame saloon, known as Bremen Hall, on the west side of First street, between E and F had been demolished and lay in the hollow adjoining as though an immense weight had fallen from above and literally crushed the building. The news was circulated that a number of men had been crushed with the building, and this raised the excitement of the crowd to the highest pitch. The firemen assisted by volunteers from the crowd, went to work with a will to remove the debris and soon succeeded in extricating Joseph Hillshaw, a longshoreman and Walter Viviance a cook in the saloon. They were worse scared than hurt. The next man taken out was Jack O'Donnell, formerly a boss track layer on the west side road. His right leg was broken above the ankle and the bone protuded through the skin. He also suffered severe internal injuries, and spat blood freely. Harry P Hinrich the bar tender was, after a few minutes found in a terribly bruised condition and shortly after taken out died. He was a native of Germany, 34 years old and a member of the Turn Verein under whose auspices he will be buried to-morrow. O Donnell was removed to Samaritan hospital and it is reported died late last night.

The building was the property of W D Buchanan whose loss is $1000. The saloon was owned by H Gerdes whose loss will reach nearly $1500. Fifteen men were in the building when the cracking of the roof and the falling plastering warned them of their danger and all made their escape to the sidewalk except the four mentioned. A dull fire was burning in the saloon stove but fortunately did not communicate to the debris.

An inquest was held at the coroner's office last night upon the body of Hinrich and a verdict returned in accordance with the facts as published.

List of Losses

A new dwelling belonging to Capt. Fred Congdon cor Front and Lincoln was prostrated loss $800.

A small house at the north end of Flia street bridge, belonging to John Maher, occupied as a grocery, cigar store and saloon went down before the furious blast. The house stood on the brink of the gulch, and a portion of the roof and south wall went off down the declivity. At the rear end of the building a family was residing, but at the moment the house went down none of the members were in, which was a most fortunate circumstance. Most of the furniture and stock was badly wrecked, loss $1,500.

Soon after the storm commenced a report was circulated that the Fourth street railroad bridge had been blown down. This rumor occasioned no small excitement but it soon became known that the report was without foundation. The structure stood the full strength of the storm without scarcely experiencing a tremor.

The butcher shop of Mr Epperly on First street was roughly handled a portion of the roof and awning in front being blown away.

The building known as St. Mathew's Episcopal chapel situated on the east side of South First street, at the end of the street railway was prostrated about 12 o clock. The building stood up quite high in an exposed position and was not able to withstand the fierce gale. During the week the little chapel is used as a schoolhouse in which certain classes belonging to the Harrison street public school are taught. Mrs Simpson has charge of the classes which aggregate about 60 pupils. Just a short time before the chapel yielded to the terrible violence of the storm Mrs Simpson and the pupils became alarmed and the school was dismissed. It was certainly a most fortunate circumstance for in a few minutes after the building was deserted it came down with a loud crash which startled the whole neighborhood. loss $700.

The windows in each end—east and west—of the Mechanics pavilion were smashed in while the gale was at its height.

A large woodshed belonging to A G Walling on the south side of Montgomery street between Front and First was blown down.

The frame of a new building belonging to E C. Bronaugh at the corner of South Third and Grant streets was leveled.

The tin roof of the residence of J A Strowbridge at the corner of Fifth and Mill was torn off loss, $500.

An old and unoccupied building at the corner of Third and Hall streets was partially demolished.

The top of the spire on St. Mary's academy was taken away.

A portion of the roof on Dr McKinnell's residence was damaged.

A small barn belonging to Mr Sedlak the milkman near the foot of Robinson hill was blown down and three valuable cows killed.

A building belonging to Mr Boise in Watson's addition was blown down and it is reported that Mrs Boise was severely injured.

A building belonging to John Dorscher below Weidler's mill was prostrated also a building belonging to E. Clarno.

The Episcopal chapel in Watson's addition is reported to have been prostrated.

During the gale the fire escape connected with the Bishop Scott Grammar School between the building and water tank blew down making a loud crash, which alarmed the pupils and caused no little excitement for the moment.

At the corner of Tenth and Clay streets the new building of Mrs. A. D Shelby was blown down.

The machine shop of the Oregon Furniture Manufacturing Company on the corner of Madison and Front streets sustained considerable damage. [illegible] Mr E. Capt. [illegible] partially [illegible] about $400 [illegible] of the Hollon house slightly damaged.

Three or four Chinese [illegible] on Taylor [illegible] south of the Washington street bridge were blown into the creek loss about $600.

The conservatory of Mark A. King on Third between Oak and Pine was damaged to the extent of $50.

The shop 35 by 100 feet in the rear of Hight & Blackiston's planing mill, on Ninth between K and L occupied by J. D. Mouthyon [illegible] was demolished. The shop was filled with mouldings and stair stock. Loss about $1 00

The Benicia hotel corner Fourth and F owned by A. Butler was blown over and demolished loss about $2000

The three story central portion of New Market building was unroofed and the tops of 26 chimnies demolished. loss $1700

The roof of R R Thompson's building occupied by Fleischner Meyer & Co was torn off loss about $86.

The roof of R. R. Thompson's building occupied by S. Goldsmith & Co, was also torn off loss about $500

The shed adjoining the street car stables on G street was demolished loss about $200

The railings about the residences of Capt J. C. Ainsworth and Gen. Babbitt on Third street were blown off loss about $250

The cornice of Mrs Fills new residence on Fifth street near Stark, was blown down and demolished a portion of the fence. loss about $75

The roof of the western portion of the court house was lifted off clean and blown into the yard. A woodshed in the rear was also demolished loss about $300

Flanders dock between B and C streets was unroofed loss about $1000

The spire of the Presbyterian church was blown over directly northward. It barely missed the residence of Samuel M Smith adjoining. Loss $600

A Chinese laundry on B street had its entire front taken out quite cleanly and left its inmates exposed to the fury of the elements.

Sixty windows on the east and south sides of the Clarendon Hotel were smashed, loss about $100

The Western Oregon depot below the Clarendon was partially unroofed.

A building formerly occupied as a roundhouse of the O. C. R. R. was demolished.

Mr Samuel D Smith of the Occidental hotel sustained severer loss than any other single person in this city. He had in progress of construction on the block bounded by Yamhill, Taylor, Lownsdale and Twelfth streets a large residence which was dashed to the ground and its timbers wrecked. The foundation was also damaged and will have to be rebuilt. The loss will not fall far short of $3000

A portion of fire wall on the north side of Col McCracken's building on North Front street was toppled over and fell on the roof of the Willamette iron works. The portion which fell was about three feet high and sixty feet long. The bricks came down with a thunderous thud which was heard far above the roar of the warring elements.

The Shipping.

The steamer Bonita reached her wharf last evening on time, and reports having experienced a fearful wind storm. At times the gale was so fierce it was feared that the whole upper works of the boat would be carried away. While coming from Rainier to Kalama the storm was the most violent. Snow fell with but little intermission during the entire passage of the Bonita. Notwithstanding the violence of the storm, the boat made her usual time and met with no accident.

The steamer Dixie Thompson had more difficulty in reaching Astoria as she met the storm square in the teeth all the way down. As the lines are down no news has been received from Astoria but it is hoped that steamer reached her destination without accident.

Capt. Babbidge of the Bonita reports that a number of barns and old buildings were blown down along Willamette slough and the ruins could be seen from the boat. He reports that the storm played havoc with the timber in many places. So far as could be ascertained no lives were lost.

The steamer State of California was met by the Bonita just below Mount Coffin and she was plowing ahead and making it bravely against the storm. She doubtless reached Astoria in her usual time.

The steamer Oregon which was detained for several days at Astoria weather bound got safely to sea Thursday morning. As the steamer crossed out over the bar she shipped several tremendous seas which swept clear over her bow.

Nothing was seen or heard from the steamer Geo W Elder when the Bonita left Astoria. She was no doubt beating off the bar yesterday.

The steamer Emma Hayward arrived here yesterday afternoon from the Cascades. She reports having encountered a wind storm of unprecedented violence. Many times, in coming down, the boat was unable to make any headway against the gale in rounding points. Sometimes the boat was forced to back and again tack to and fro and allow the current to drift her down against the wind. At some points the storm raged with such fury that all on board expected every moment to have the cabin torn off. The river was so rough that the boat pitched and tossed like a ship at sea. The waves rolled in against the windward shore at some places to the height of ten feet or more with great force the wind driving the spray thirty or forty feet high up on the bank. River men all declare that they have never seen a heavier wind storm on the Columbia. Trees were falling on each side of the river, some of the more exposed points at the rate of one every few seconds the sharp cracking reminding one of a brisk cannonade. Some of these giant sons of the forest were torn out by the roots and pitched down the sides of the mountain and the trunks of others were twisted off 40 and 50 feet above the ground—snapped asunder like a pipe stem. The scene was one of grandeur and terror combined and will long be vividly remembered by those who witnessed the storm. So furious was the gale raging at Vancouver that the Emma Hayward did not land there, it being deemed too hazardous. Fortunately the steamer reached her wharf in safety without damage and without injury to any person.

No connection was made at Kalama by the down river steamers coming or going yesterday. For some reason—no doubt in consequence of the heavy storm—the train did not reach Kalama.

Considering the great volume of the storm, and its duration it is a matter of wonder that no damage worthy of mention was sustained by the O. S. N. Co's and W. V. & T. Co's fleet of boats. Early yesterday morning Capt Geo J Ainsworth on consulting the barometer was surprised to see that instrument alarmingly low and constantly falling. It was so very low that Capt Ainsworth knew that a storm of great violence was imminent. He immediately gave orders to have all the boats belonging to the companies which were idle put in the best possible condition to resist the storm and securely lashed to the wharves along the front between the foot of Washington street and Morrison. The boats at the boneyard were also tied up as securely as possible. Some of the boats were chafed a little from tugging at their hawsers but no material damage was done. Had not these timely precautions been observed by the officers of these companies very disastrous damages would have resulted.

The ship Eliza McNeil which was moored at the railroad wharf was struck violently by the heavy waves in the river and the wind about half past 11 o clock. The force of the current was so strong against the ship that she dislodged the piles to which her stern lines were fastened and her stern swung out to the stream. To prevent a similar accident to her bow anchors were dropped and then only by the most strenuous exertions was she kept from tearing loose and drifting down the river. The entire crew worked earnestly until after dark before the ship was again safely moored.

The Railroads

The railroads have not shared the immunity from damage and delay that fav[illegible] the shipping. On the west side road, one bent of bridge No. 4 and one of bridge No 3 gave way but they can be repaired with little delay and no great expense. An engineer [illegible] met with a narrow escape from [illegible] shed by a falling [illegible]. Between [illegible] south [illegible] have been blown across the track [illegible] reported [illegible] the track fell before [illegible] below [illegible] keeper.

The east side road fared roughly. The shed in which stood the directors' car and two new passenger cars for the west side road was blown down and the cars badly damaged. It is reported that the entire car works have been unroofed but the rumor could not be traced to any reliable source. It is also reported that there are several land slides. This is probably true as the through train did not arrive last night. She was reported on time at Eugene but since that report the lines have been down. The Albany express did not leave yesterday afternoon. The regular mail train will be started out this morning.

A prominent minister of the city desiring to send a dispatch to Forest Grove called at the telegraph office and inquired whether he could get a dispatch through. The manager with a look of injured innocence said. The lines in every direction [illegible] from this office as far as [illegible] are down. With a look of disgust the reverend gentleman retired.

The lines are down in every direction.

The storm raged with great violence at Marquam's farm the top of one of the highest hills west of the city. Several out houses and barns—indeed all the buildings except the family dwelling—were blown down and every foot of fencing on the place was spread flat upon the ground. Fruit and other trees were thrown down and much miscellaneous damage done. Other farms in the neighborhood suffered severely and but one or two small trees were left standing in the Talbot grove.

[illegible] was blown from its fastenings and crushed through the roof of a shed belonging to Geo W. Holsapple.

A Chinaman standing on Flanders dock was blown into the river but was immediately rescued by some countrymen.

A false report gained general circulation that four men had been crushed to death at Hight & Blackiston's planing mill on North Ninth street.

Almost every tin roof on First and Front streets was more or less damaged.

Workmen were busily engaged all last night in covering the damaged roofs with tarred paper, tarpaulins etc to prevent as much as possible any further damage by rain.

The price of tin roofing has risen within twenty four hours from $7 50 to $10 per square.

The fence around the German [illegible] on the Ninth street side succumbed to the winds.

J. C. Carson's delivery wagon was blown over the elevated roadway leading to Weidler's mill and had two wheels smashed. damage about $50

Three men standing on one of Capt J C Fair fowl's scows drifted a few yards into the river near Flanders dock but were rescued by some men who threw them a line and towed the scow in.

An immense stump coming down the river yesterday morning at a fearful rate snapped the cable of the Stark street ferry as if it were a thread.

The Stark street ferry ceased running from 11 A M until 4 P M.

The steamboat Vancouver blew her whistle at her accustomed hour of departure and a crowd of several hundred persons immediately assembled at her dock to see her attempt to buffet the waves and fearful that she would be unable to do so successfully. Her officers however considered it prudent to wait for a lull, and so did not pull out till nearly 4 o clock.

The handsome little vane surmounting the turret of D F Harrington's building at the corner of Ash and Fourth streets was demolished in less time than it requires to write this paragraph when caught by a sudden swirl.

A building at the corner of C and Third streets caught fire during the storm, but the embryo conflagration was quietly extinguished by a few pails of water judiciously applied.

That old rooster which has stood for so many years over the central school building, took wings and flew away. He could not face the zephyr.

The tin roofing on Mr Hank Greene's residence corner of First and [illegible] streets, rolled up into a tube and forcibly coming into contact with the chimney sent the latter tumbling to the floor and caused the family to fly for safety to the sidewalk.

Two of the chimneys in the North school toppled over and the partitions between two rooms were destroyed. The children were badly frightened. school was dismissed and all returned to their homes.

The tin ventilator on the postoffice building an unwieldy thing was carried bodily into the yard fronting the Central schoolhouse, and pieces of the slate roofing were hurled in all directions striking pedestrians indiscriminately.

A skylight in Dekum's building and others from innumerable dwellings were blown away and smashed to pieces.

The night watchman at the O S N Co's office is a huge sleeper having slept through the entire din and clatter of the storm. He was oblivious to everything and knows less concerning the storm than any man in the town.

The Mission chapel contained besides school desks and furniture, chapel seats an excellent organ communion table Sunday school library and all the necessary things for conducting both service and Sunday school. All is gone broken and destroyed. A Sunday school of 70 children met in the morning, and service was held every Sunday evening. All is scattered to the wind. It is hoped that the citizens will help in the construction of a building which has proved of such benefit to the southern part of the city.

East Portland

The handsome little Catholic church (S Francis,) in East Portland which stood at the corner of Eleventh and [illegible] streets, was one of the first to yield to the fury of the storm king. This building stood up on high ground in a very exposed position, and met the full brunt of the gale. The entire edifice was blown down and reduced to a total wreck. The loss is estimated at $2000.

The new Baptist church in East Portland, it is reported, topped over during the gale, but the statement lacks confirmation.

The boat house of Jos Pacquet, south of the L street ferry landing, went down before the blast and may be chronicled as a total wreck.

The smoke stack of the little ferry boat Katie Ladd, which was moored at the foot of J street, was taken away, also a portion of the cabin roof.

The gale made things very lively at the park blowing down great numbers of trees. Those living in the vicinity of the park state that the popping of the trees reminded them of the discharge of musketry. The storm thinned out the timber very rapidly for the space of an hour or more.

A drayman named C Workman was very seriously and perhaps fatally injured. He was walking along on the sidewalk when a plank caught by a sudden and violent gust of wind was hurled violently against his face very seriously injuring him. He was knocked off the bridge and falling some distance to the ground sustained a fracture of the leg.

Meteorological Observations

The following table shows the height of the barometer before after and during the progress of the storm:

Time	Barom	Wind	Time	Barom	Wind
8 57 A M	29 615	SE	1 05 P M	28 641	S
4 32	29 578	SE	2 06	28 597	S
7 00	29 316	SE	3 00	28 941	W
7 57	29 187	SE	4.00	29 187	W
10 00	28 932	SE	5 00	[illegible]	W
11 00	28 781	SE	5 00	29 311	SW
11 57	28 638	S

The barometer was lowest 28.5[illegible] at 1 20 P M at 1 30 P M 28 569. The readings are corrected for temperature instrumental error and elevation.

The lowest the barometer had reached in Portland since the signal service office was established until this storm, is 29 085.

From 11 to 11 15 A M the velocity of the wind was 39 miles per hour from 11 45 to 1 45 miles per hour from 1 45 to 2 60 miles per hour. No record is made for less than fifteen minutes, but it is reliably estimated that the velocity was for several minutes at various times from 12 m to 1 2 not less than 60 miles per hour and there were occasional gusts of a few seconds duration of 70 miles per hour.

There is no doubt that the storm raged with equal fury throughout the Willamette valley but in the absence of reports from Calif[illegible] for the last four days nothing can be surmised with regard to that section.

A LEAF FROM HISTORY

[illegible] the earl of Flanders [illegible]

[illegible] the verg [illegible]

[illegible] habitants Had the earl [illegible] the commer [illegible] saved himself much [illegible] and [illegible] cured himself a great [illegible] loving subjects but he was [illegible] a vain haughty tyrant and was now [illegible] to wreak a [illegible] revenge upon [illegible] who had so long denied his power [illegible] promising to meet the deputation at Jurney he remained at his palace in Bruges and when after several days of anxious suspense they sent messengers to inquire if their lord would deign to honor them with his presence he returned for an answer that he would not come himself but would send his council with his ultimatum

Another week of fearful suspense passed by before the deputation from Ghent received these ultimata of the haughty earl which were the most cruel and degrading that a conqueror could offer to the conquered

The inhabitants of Ghent said the council sent by the earl of Flanders are not to expect peace from him unless all male persons from the age of fifteen to sixty shall come out of the city barefooted and with halters around their necks and take their places on the road between Ghent and Bruges, where the earl will wait for them and either grant them pardon or put them to death according to his pleasure

Of course such degrading terms as these could not be accepted by the deputation from Ghent and it is almost certain that the earl himself never expected they would be His object evidently being to provoke the citizens to further resistance that he might slaughter them en masse and give their city up to pillage

On returning to Ghent Philip von Artaveld held a consultation with another redoubted captain Peter du Bois and it was agreed that the former should make such a report to the inhabitants as would render them desperate, and excite them to offensive action This he did the next day in the market place, recounting all the insults the citizens had received and telling them they had but one course of three to pursue—either to close the gates of the city and die of famine or go forth with halters around their necks for the earl to wreak his vengeance on or to select five or six thousand of the most brave and determined of their number and instantly march to attack the earl in Bruges

With one accord the people chose the most valiant course and the next day 2000 men with Philip von Artaveld at their head marched out of Ghent and took their way to Bruges carrying with them 200 carts laden with cannon artillery, and only seven with provisions the latter being all that could possibly be spared from the famishing town

On arriving before the city of Bruges Philip Von Artaveld drew up his whole army around a small hill on which he stationed himself and harangued them in a most eloquent manner showing them that everything was staked on the coming battle—the safety of themselves their wives and children—that if even honor would permit them to retreat there was no place of refuge for them for their own city was in the last stages of famine and the gates of every other were closed against them—and finally that only provision enough for one meal remained and except as conquerors they could never hope to eat again

Meantime the Earl of Flanders at his gorgeous palace in Bruges surrounded by his knights and retainers heard of the approach of this little army of half starved men with a smile of contempt

The wicked madmen he said [illegible] beard the lion in his den! I will go forth and over awe them with a host and then wipe them from the face of the earth

That very day he marched out of the city, at the head of forty thousand full armed knights and warriors expecting an easy victory A little before sunset he drew up his army in front of the men of Ghent and the battle was commenced with cannon on both sides, The Ghent men fought with the fury of despair, and, strange as it may seem when it is remembered that they were outnumbered as eight to one, they soon had their cowardly enemies flying in every direction They pursued shouting Ghent and slaughtered without mercy The whole route back to the gates of Bruges the distance of a league was soon strewn with the dead and wounded, and before the now terrified Earl and his body guard of knights could return and put the city in a state of defense, the Ghent men were in it and masters of the place

It was now that the vain, pompous, haughty Earl of Flanders so far from dictating degrading terms to the men who had sued to him for mercy thought only of saving his own life He had left his own palace with a blaze of torches to repair to the market place and put himself at the head of the citizens whom he had already commanded to assemble there when he was met by a frightened crowd of knights and squires who assured him that not only was the town in possession of the men of Ghent but that a large body of these rebels was even at that moment in the act of surrounding him for the purpose of taking him alive

Heaven cried the earl in terror which way will I retreat?

There is now no certain way open to you my lord!" was the terrible reply for whatever avenue is not now closed will be before you can use it—even your palace we fear is by this time in possession of your enemies

'What then is to be done? What then can I do? Oh save me! save me! cried the wretched man

'Your only chance my lord is to order out these lights disguise your person dismiss all attendants and escape alone in the darkness was the terrible response

On hearing this the earl instantly dismounted, commanded the torches to be extinguished and his attendants to disperse and seizing his servant by the arm he fled with him into a small dark street, where his armor and rich apparel were hastily removed, and the humble garments of the other substituted

'Now go, said the earl, in a low hurried tone and leave me to myself Save yourself if you can and if I escape I will reward you If taken remember you must know nothing of me

I will die sooner than betray you my lord replied the faithful valet

They separated and in the humble dress of his own servant the proud and haughty earl began to wander up and down the streets of his native city seeking some mean obscure place of safety What a change had a few short hours effected in the fortunes of this man! He who rose in the pride and power of a king, would have been glad to have sunk to a peaceful sleep in the rags of a beggar

It was a terrible night for the wandering Earl of Flanders He had some very narrow escapes—more than once coming [illegible] down some dark passage or drawing himself up in some dark doorway while the prowling crowd was hurrying past At last finding himself in a miserable quarter in the city and in front of a mean looking hut the danger pressed him to seek his safety within He tried the door found it unfastened and entered in trembling haste The room was small almost without furniture and black with smoke and dirt A woman and a child appeared to be its only occupants the mother turned upon him with pallid features and clasped her child evidently fearing he had come to take her life The earl knew that every thing depended upon her favor that there was not a moment to be lost, and he instantly threw himself upon her mercy without disguise

Woman he said with trembling eager-ness I am the [illegible] the earl of Flanders [illegible] seeking to escape from the enemies who are searching the city In heaven's name [illegible] me save me and great shall be thy reward

[illegible]

I declare that I must have made no [illegible]

[illegible]

This was the [illegible] earl of Flanders [illegible] through that terrible night in the disguise of his servant under the bed of a poor woman's children The next night he escaped from the town in the garb of a peasant and after wandering about the fields for a time at last fell in with some of his own knights and succeeded in reaching the castle of Lille in safety

Nearly all the surrounding cities surrendered to Ghent and Philip von Artaveld and Peter du Bois became warriors of great renown in the war that followed which soon involved the kingdoms of England and France

Philip von Artaveld was slain in battle and not long after the earl of Flanders died suddenly and it is supposed by the hand of an assassin

Duels and Drinking at Leipsic

Ridiculous duels are very frequent says a writer in the Boston Advertiser and are against the law but as they are not attended with much danger they are winked at It is said here that these duels increase the sense of honor etc an idea for which I cannot see one spark of justification Each additional scar on a student's face increases his swagger and insolence the only increase visible to me The fights occur very seldom and when they do happen amount to nothing They push and shout and scratch and [illegible] deal and that is about all A few days ago together with a western friend I was watching one of those pushing matches when the gentleman in question observed in a disgusted tone of voice Out in Coey anne where I live when fifty men get to fighting you have to sweep up the eyes and noses afterwards saying which he jumped down into the middle of the crowd doing the only drinking reported Of course these students drink a good deal of beer but they leave whisky and brandy alone I have known a man to drink 52 glasses of strong beer in a little more than 12 hours A feat which equals it was performed by an officer here famous only for his drinking abilities At dinner one day a comrade offered to bet him a large sum that he could not drink a quart bottle of champagne out without taking the bottle from his lips The challenged man thought a moment and said Give me half an hour to think it over He went out came back in half an hour accepted the bet and won it amid great applause Some one asked him why it took him so long to accept it Well, he said I was not quite sure I could do it so I went home first and tried it and found out I could do it and then I came back

Hepatitis or Liver Complaint,

[illegible]

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs increases on pressure, sometimes the pain is in the left side, the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax, the head is troubled with pain accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant The patient complains of weariness and debility, he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin, his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it In fact he distrusts every remedy Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER

DR C McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL

For all bilious derangements and as a simple purgative they are unequaled

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

The genuine are never sugar coated

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR McLANE'S LIVER PILLS

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS on the wrapper

Insist upon having the genuine Dr C McLANE'S LIVER PILLS prepared by Fleming Bros of Pittsburgh Pa the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation
